Rule 26, FRCP, Disclosure

Alan S. Newell

Alan S. Newell

September 12, 2007

Introduction

My name is Alan S. Newell. I am President of, and a Senior Associate Historian with, Historical Research Associates, Inc. (HRA). I have a Bachelor and a Master of Arts degree in American History from the University of Montana. My business address is 125 Bank Street, Fifth Floor, Missoula, Montana, 59802. My curriculum vita is attached as Exhibit A. Included in that vita is a list of my publications within the last ten years and testimony within the last four years.

HRA is a historical consulting firm with offices located in Missoula, Montana, Seattle, Washington and Portland, Oregon. HRA historians and anthropologists specialize in researching historical questions. I have worked as a professional historian for HRA for 33 years. During that time, I have been an active member of a number of professional historical organizations including the Organization of American Historians, the American Society for Environmental History and the National Council on Public History (NCPH). I have regularly attended and presented papers at annual meeting and symposia offered by these organizations. Currently, I am a member of the NCPH where I served on the Board of Directors from 1992-1995 and as the organization's elected president from 2000-2001.

I also have served on the advisory board of the Center for the Rocky Mountain West, a non-profit research institute that is affiliated with the University of Montana. I am a Faculty Affiliate with the Department of History at the University of Montana where I have taught courses in public history and historical research methods. I also have served on graduate committees for students in Western History.

In February 2003, I filed an expert report with this court in support of the Office of Historical Trust Accounting's (OHTA) 2003 accounting plan (Exhibit B). My 2003 report also offered a critique of Plaintiffs' proposed model for determining funds owed to Individual Indian Money (IIM) account holders by the United States. I was subsequently called by the United States to testify at the 2003 trial on that plan and the Department of the Interior's (DOI) efforts to reconcile IIM accounts. Based on this earlier and subsequent work with OHTA, Department of Justice (DOJ) attorneys have asked me to review the recent reports submitted by Paul M. Homan and Richard E. Fasold and to assess whether those reports cause me to change the opinions that I offered in February 2003.

HRA has charged the DOJ an hourly rate of $185 per hour for my work on this project.

Approach

In preparing the present report, I reviewed my expert report prepared in 2003 and the recent update to OHTA's plan dated May 31, 2007. I also reviewed the "Expert Report of Paul M. Homan" and the "Expert Report of Richard E. Fasold" both dated August 17, 2007. In preparing my current report, I also considered the work that my firm (HRA, Inc.) has undertaken for OHTA since my testimony in 2003.

Over the past four years, our work for OHTA has focused on three areas. We have provided personnel and consulting support for the Litigation Support Accounting (LSA) and the "Land-to-Dollars Completeness Test". Both of these activities are referenced in OHTA's May 31, 2007 plan update.¹ In addition to this work, HRA also has prepared a number of "reservation histories" for OHTA. These histories are short summaries of the legislative and administrative background of leasing and contracting on allotted Indian reservations. HRA has submitted 55 of these histories to OHTA.

Opinions

In my February 2003 report I offered three general opinions: 1) that there is a vast quantity of federal records and data available for use in the IIM reconciliation process; 2) that Plaintiffs' should not, as they apparently explicitly did, ignore this data in developing their "model"; and 3) that OHTA's plan for using these records was a reasonable and prudent approach to reconciling the IIM accounts.² After reviewing the above referenced documents and considering the work that HRA has undertaken for OHTA since 2003, I find nothing to cause me to alter my opinions from 2003. Indeed, the Fasold Report dated August 17, 2007 explains that Mr. Fasold has undertaken no additional work on his "model" since he submitted his February 28, 2003 report. The criticism that I had of the Fasold methodology in 2003 remains today. With one notable exception (that having to do with assessing timber harvests on allotted lands) the model specifically ignores primary source data on Indian resources. It also fails to account for the numerous ways that reservations were allotted in practice or the way that these lands left Indian ownership.³

Mr. Homan apparently bases his opinion of the limitations of the OHTA plan on the need to find every single financial record that documents each transaction in an IIM account. I am not qualified to express an opinion as to whether the accounting requires this level of effort. And, as I noted in my February 26, 2003 report, there are “numerous gaps” in the federal record of Indian affairs dating back to 1887.⁴ However, as I noted in that report and as has been confirmed by our work with OHTA since 2003, many of the required documents can be found if sufficient effort is applied. One obvious reason for this conclusion is that, as with any bureaucracy, the Department of the Interior generated multiple documents and copies of documents for leasing and contracting activity. A document that may have been lost in one collection may be found in another. For example, research for the land-to-dollar prototype study at Horton Agency in Kansas in November 2005 made use of lease copies available in the office files of the agency's conservation resources program. The realty department at the agency maintains the original leases, but it ships leases that are no longer current or outside the agency's retention period to AIRR in Lenexa. The lease copies maintained by the conservation program in this case provided a research opportunity for the land-to-dollar study that was then underway at the agency.

DOI's effort to centralize Indian records at the American Indian Records Repository in Lenexa, Kansas has been an important step in making the search for documents, regardless of where they may be in federal agency files, more effective.

There is nothing in the latest Homan report to cause me to change my 2003 opinion as to the value of the extant federal record.
